USO tour brings smiles to Soldiers' faces

Spc. Ricardo Branch
1st BCT Public Affairs

CAMP RAMADI, Iraq – The United Service Organization brought its Holiday Troop Visit Tour to the servicemembers and civilians with a special show at the Morale, Welfare and Recreation center, Dec. 19 at Camp Ramadi.

Adm. Michael G. Mullen, the 17th Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, opened the show to an excited crowd of more than 600 attendees.

“You all do a lot for your country, thanks for what you’re doing,” said Mullen. “I know you all didn’t come here to see me talk so let’s get this show started!”

The MWR center was filled with a sea of digital camouflage, as Soldiers, Marines, Airmen and civilians crowded around the stage to cheer, watch, and laugh as the celebrities came out to entertain them.

Miss USA, Rachel Smith opened up the show. Next, comedian Lewis Black came out with his standup comedy, which brought about many laughs from those attending.

“This is awesome,” said Sgt. Gerald Murdock, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Brigade Combat Team, 3rd Infantry Division. “It’s a really good show and the morale’s up for many people today.”

The show also featured famous comedian Robin Williams, musician Kid Rock and cyclist Lance Armstrong. Armstrong always expressed a desire to visit the troops overseas to show his support. When he was approached for a trip into Iraq by Williams and the USO, he agreed immediately.

“It’s been an amazing trip for us,” he said. “I’m still trying to figure out how I got placed between Lewis Black and Robin Williams because I’m just a bike racer - and a retired one at that.”

After causing some laughter in the audience,

Armstrong became serious.

“I think for us back in the United States, we have good lives,” he said. “We have great opportunities.”

“I now have a new sense of perspective to be focused and be committed. You guys have given us the greatest Christmas present we can get, and that’s not to take things for granted.”

Armstrong, who is on his first trip with the USO, said the commitment and dedication from servicemembers to defend the country is something he’ll never forget.

“What you all have done by signing up to be here and defend our freedom and our country was your choice,” he said. “It was a selfless commitment to come here and defend America. When I get home, I’m going to tell my children of the thousands of heroes I met over here on this trip.”

Following Armstrong, Williams had his own take on the experience of traveling in Iraq.

“For everyone of us, everyday here is an extraordinary thing,” he said. “You meet people and come away with such energy. We’re all having a great time with these shows, and I just wanted to say get home safe and thanks.”

Williams entertained the crowd with more standup before Kid Rock came and stole the show with every song he performed.

“I was going to come here and play a couple of Christmas songs,” Rock said. “I think I’ll start with the songs I grew up with instead.”

Kid Rock played “Sweet Home Alabama” as the crowd sang and clapped along. After a few more classic rock and roll tunes, he played some new songs he wrote this year and sent the crowd in an uproar with applause and cheers.

Since the USO’s creation in 1941, many celebrities have lent their time and talents to visit military bases around the world. The holidays are a time when celebrities come out in force to show their support to the armed forces.

New mural encourages character for Hunter children

Kaytrina Curtis
Hunter Public Affairs

From the colors of their hair to the twinkle in their eyes, each animal painted on the walls of the Child Development Center entrance gives customers a new welcome as they enter the facility on Hunter Army Airfield. Amarys Martinez, CDC director, started depicting a mural of six animals on the entrance wall; each one representing a pillar of character.

Martinez hopes the mural will encourage the children to learn about the six pillars of character: trustworthiness, respect, responsibility, fairness, citizenship and caring.

The project took approximately one month to complete. Martinez came in nights and weekends to get the project done.

“The children would notice that there was something different on the wall (each day),” she said.

Martinez realized she needed assistance and accepted the helping hands of Family member and customer, Anna De Stefano, spouse to Capt. Michael De Stefano of 4th Battalion, 3rd Aviation Regiment.

Once Martinez finished painting the giraffe, De Stefano, a graduate of Liceo Aristico in Italy, took on the project with gusto.

De Stefano donated approximately 30 hours of her time to help complete the project.

Martinez said she is happy with the responses she gets from the children and with De Stefano’s work.

“She (De Stefano) helped us and did a wonderful job. She is very talented,” Martinez said.

Stewart to open new teen center

Lance Davis
Frontline Staff

If you are a teen looking for the ideal place to call your space, you need not look any further. Dagmar Peguero-Olinger, Child and Youth Services division chief, anticipates the opening of a new teen center here at Fort Stewart in mid-to-late 2009. Plans are ready, and the construction begins later this year near the Newman Fitness Center.

“The key players have been the teens,” insisted Peguero-Olinger.

This project started with a mere conversation of adults and teens. One of those teens was Family member, Kelly McKinnon. “The adults asked us what we wanted and a teen center was one of the few things we wanted,” said Kelly McKinnon.

This discussion led to the actual planning and implementation of a teen center. According to McKinnon, a group of teens designed the layout of the center, which will include but not be limited to a café, game room, cinema room, computer access, a dance floor, and more. A name has not been determined at this time.

When comparing the youth center to the upcoming teen center, the teen center will target socializing and having fun.

“The existing youth services primarily provide educational services and a safe haven for them to do their homework,” Peguero-Olinger said. “The teen center will be a less structured environment where teens can socialize and have fun under some adult supervision of course.”

The teen center targets older teens ages 15-18. The centralized location will be convenient for older youth who do not live in the Bryan Village area where the youth center is located.

Col. Todd Buchs, Fort Stewart-Hunter Army Airfield garrison commander, has been heavily involved in meeting the needs of the youth, especially the teens, at this installation, Peguero-Olinger said. The Army Community of Excellence has significantly funded this project.

“If we didn’t have the support of the garrison, we wouldn’t get a teen center or any of the opportunities we have,” McKinnon said. “It would really be cool if some of the Soldiers would come and interact with us at the teen center because many of us don’t know a lot about the Army.”

Soldiers and other adults on the installation are welcomed to volunteer and will receive training on how to relate with older youth.

“I’m very glad this new center is going to be at our installation. Teens are a very vital part of the Army Family and we want them to know they have a helping hand, listening ear, and place to call their own” Peguero-Olinger said.

For more information about the new teen center, call Child and Youth Services at 767-4491.

Advocacy program assists Wounded Warriors TRICARE’s Southern region

Special to the Frontline

Navigating the Military Health System is getting easier for Wounded Warriors and their Families thanks to a new advocacy unit in TRICARE's Southern Region. The Warrior Navigation and Assistance Program provides guidance to Active Duty and Guard and Reserve servicemembers as they transition through the MHS. Established by Humana Military Healthcare Services, the managed care support contractor for TRICARE's Southern Region, the WNAP offers one-on-one assistance with many unique health care challenges servicemembers may face. Issues may include access to care; or simply the need for information on all available resources. A dedicated toll-free number can be used by servicemembers transitioning through the health care system. Calling 888-4GO-WNAP provides direct access to a multi-disciplinary team with the mission to assist servicemembers and/or their Family members. The WNAP incorporates four elements: tools and information for the servicemembers; program management; clinical programs; and provider education and resources. Resources on the HMHS Web site at www.humana-military.com include the “Information and Resources for Combat Veterans” brochure. Health care providers can find tools and resources addressing the unique needs of servicemembers returning home from deployment. Care management initiatives include behavioral health support and assistance with seamless transition for servicemembers and Families for the care they need, when they need it. There is also expanded outreach to Guard and Reserve members with transition coordinators delivering detailed TRICARE benefit education. WNAP services via the toll-free line are available to those who live in the TRICARE Southern Region which includes South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Louisiana and all but the southwestern corner of Texas. Web site tools and information are available to anyone worldwide with computer access.

Take 'do over', get second chance with Christ

Chap. (Capt.) Phillip Raybon
92nd Engineer Battalion

Have you ever had a day where you just blew it? I mean one of those days where anything and everything that could go wrong did! How many of you can look back at a certain event in the year 2007 and say, "I wish I would have handled that differently." I believe I would be safe in assuming that we have all had those days.

I love to watch children at play. As a father, I know that the innocence of a child is a wonderful sight to behold. Children, like adults, have their own ground rules and rites of passage that they closely follow. One of their ground rules is what has been called the, "Do Over". When something goes wrong for them, they simply shout, "Do over", and whatever they did wrong is erased from the record books. They were given a second chance.

As adults, wouldn't it be wonderful to be able to incorporate the, "Do Over", when we experience those days when everything goes wrong? Wouldn't it be wonderful to shout, "Do over," and have our past mistakes erased? Now, some of you may be thinking, that's impossible! That can't be right! Chaplain Raybon, do you honestly think we can have a, "Do over?" Yes I do, and I will tell you the reason why. The teachings of the Bible clearly demonstrates that we can have a, "Do over" no matter how bad we have blown it and no matter how bad the mistake. I will also tell you that I firmly believe in the "Do over" philosophy because I have been given that "Do over," a second chance in my life and walk with Christ. My friends, if you have not yet asked for a "Do over", I want you to know that you can ask for one today.

Today, we will take a look at a man named Saul. This man was a persecutor of the church and Christians. He had the power to bring any man or woman who professed to be a Christian to the High Priest as prisoners. This man stood by and watched as Steven, that faithful champion of Christ was stoned to death. In fact, by his own admission, he approved of his death and stood by to guard the coats of the men who killed Steven.

Saul, however, was not a violent man. He honestly thought that he was following the will of God. He was sincere in his beliefs about God; however, he was sincerely wrong. As he traveled down the road to Damascus, he was confronted by the very person he was persecuting, Jesus Christ. In an amazing act of grace, Saul was not struck dead on that day. He was given a second chance. In fact, he would later be known by the Greek name, Paul.

History, and even Paul himself, tells us that he was a persecutor of the church. However, we also know that Paul used his second chance to be one of the greatest Christians who ever lived. This one time persecutor of the church converted to true Christianity and authored 2/3 of the New Testament that we have today.

My friends, God is a God of second chances. You can have that do over.

Military thanks Savannah Board of Realtors

Kaytrina Curtis
Hunter Public Affairs

Hunter Army Airfield Garrison Commander, Lt. Col. Dan Whitney, and Lt. Col. John McNally, rear detachment commander, Combat Aviation Brigade, presented the Savannah Board of Realtors with certificates and a coin of appreciation for the continued support provided to military Families on Hunter Army Airfield during the holiday season.

This past Christmas season, the Savannah Board of Realtors donated more than 100 gifts, toys and food items to Family members. The appreciation was felt not just by the recipients but also by the command, especially during this time of deployment when Families may miss their loved ones the most.

"Thank you for not only this gracious gift during the holiday season, for some of these Soldiers, Sailors, Marine Corps folks who needed that little extra push during the holiday season, but thank you for being a great citizen of the coastal empire," said Whitney.

McNally also thanked the realtors for the wonderful support that they have shown to the Combat Aviation Brigade this past holiday season.

"You take care of us," McNally said. "You introduce us to your community and I will say (with) just my personal experience in Savannah, this is the most outstanding, giving community, and the most supportive community for the military that I have experienced in my 18-year career."

The Golden Compass, not worth the controversy

Commentary by:
Sasha McBrayer
Fort Stewart Museum

Some Christian groups have openly called for a boycott of the much advertised fantasy adventure film "The Golden Compass." Why? To start, the author of the tree books in the trilogy, "His Dark Materials" (upon which Compass is based), Phillip Pullman, is a very vocal atheist. While many atheist writers create brilliant works enjoyed by all sorts of people, Pullman has very vocally bashed the Catholic Church and criticized Christian novelist, C.S. Lewis and his fantasy piece, "The Chronicles of Narnia". He has imbued his negative spirit into his three fantasy books.

"The Golden Compass" film is about a little girl from a universe parallel to ours. Her name is Lyra, easy for me to remember, because she seems to be a pathological liar, and liar and Lyra sound alike. This, too, has been a subject of contention for religious groups. Lyra is a wild child who disobeys, and talks back in the film. Pullman asserts that children ought to be taught to question authority and learn self reliance.

Lyra's world is different than ours in that it is ruled tyrannically by a sinister religious organization known as the Magisterium. This entity seems to be Pullman's version of the Catholic Church. Characters in the film feebly attempt to defend the villainous Magisterium by saying people need to be told what to do. In fact, the group's only goals seem to be to control everybody, to hurt and kidnap children, and to stop research, discovery, and free thinking. Academics, scholars, warriors, witches, and even a hearty group of pirate gypsies called the Gyptians, are the good guys fighting against the Magisterium and for freedom and free will. No where in this first film, however does the Magisterium practice any kind of worship, nor mention a deity they serve.

Lyra's world is also different because, whereas we live with our souls firmly inside our bodies, her people live with them outside their bodies in the form of an animal companion. As children, these Jiminy Cricket-like companions, who can speak, by the way, are constantly shape-shifting. Lyra's for example is called Pan. He is sometimes a ferret (or rather a pine marten), sometimes a humming bird, a mouse, and even a cat. You can kill someone by killing their animal companion. You can injure the creature and their human will feel it. This is an interesting and creative aspect of the story; however Pullman makes the curious decision of calling these animal souls "dæmons", which is naturally unsettling. I would like to believe there is solid reason for this name choice. Perhaps the author is trying to suggest that our inner demons (or outer ones in this case) make us more interesting or more complete. Regardless, these dæmons chose one shape as the person becomes an adult.

And so it goes that Lyra stumbles into a dangerous journey to save missing children from the Magisterium. As the story unravels, she seems driven by fate. There is talk of prophecy. She is special. Yet things come together quite coincidentally. Along the way she meets my favorite character, Iorck Byrnison, a giant talking polar bear, voiced dynamically by Ian McKellen (you may know him as Gandalf or Magneto). Iorck is obviously Pullman's answer to "Aslan", the Lion of the Narnia universe. Where Aslan is bold and wise; a Christ-figure who dies and resurrects to save his people, Iorck is a dejected alcoholic bear, cheated from his throne and his great armor (which is somehow his soul) when we first meet him. Lyra helps him to regain all that he has lost. Iorck is brave and fiercely loyal. He is a beautiful, flawed creature, and makes for a touching relationship with the girl.

The cast of Compass is rounded out by underused Daniel Craig (the new 007), the stunning Eva Green, and the utterly delightful Sam Elliot. Of course Nicole Kidman is the sinisterly beautiful villain (and face of the Magisterium) who does a wonderful job of being scary. She also explains to the press that the Catholic Church is part of her "essence" and she'd not have involved herself with the film if she believed it anti-

Catholic. Her character is interesting because author Pullman has suggested that C.S. Lewis is sexist. In Narnia, the eldest girl child forgets her fantastic adventures as she ages. Some believe Lewis meant that young girls discovering boys somehow makes them evil. Pullman's adult female character, however is cruel and psychotic, and in the novels continuously skips back and forth between the side of good and evil. She can't seem to make up her mind. She's also a terrible mother.

While Compass does look quite pretty, the warmth and a magic felt in films like Narnia, Harry Potter, and Lord of the Rings seems missing from the film. Many things were ill explained and confusing. I felt I was watching one man's complaint, not someone's imagination unfurled, not a story worth telling because it was fabulous on its own, but rather someone's desperate attempt to belittle other creative works.

All in all I do not believe the film was worth the controversy, though Christians should be aware that in the final book Lyra and her companions help kill the god of their universe. It might be extreme to say they kill God, but there is a kind of deity and he does die. For children's literature, it is quite alarming. That being said, even atheist groups have shown disapproval over the film spawned from Pullman's attempts to water down the films from his original books. In the end American audiences are clever enough to decide whether the film is good or bad and whether its themes and intentions are good or bad.
